2020 AMMI CANADA TRAINEE RESEARCH AWARD

This award is given to a trainee to promote scholarship and scientific excellence among trainees. It is awarded for excellence in primary research conducted during their infectious diseases or medical microbiology training and demonstrated by publication of an original research article on a topic within the disciplines of infectious diseases or medical microbiology. The monetary value of the AMMI Canada Trainee Research Award is $1,000 CDN.

Eligibility:

- The applicant must be either: (1) An active trainee, defined as one who is currently an AMMI Canada Member-in-Training, as specified per the criteria on the AMMI Canada website; or (2) A recently-graduated trainee, defined as one who is within one year of having completed their Royal College recognized training period in a Canadian training program, at the time of application of this award.
- The article must have final acceptance date for publication or have been published between the dates of December 1, 2019 and November 30, 2020. NOTE: Manuscripts that are submitted in review or that are conditionally accepted (eg. manuscripts in revision, etc.) are not eligible.
- The trainee must be first or last author of the publication. Trainees who are co-contributing first or senior authorship are also eligible. NOTE: This must be clearly documented in the accepted manuscript.
- Applicants are not permitted to apply for both AMMI Canada Trainees Research Award and Dr Juan Embil Award of Excellence in Infectious Disease Research

Application procedure:

The application package must include the following:

- Canadian Common CV (CIHR, Academic format)
- Accepted version of the manuscript (English or French)
- Copy of the communication from the journal documenting the date of acceptance.

Deadline for applications for award is January 25, 2021.

Please send your application electronically to the AMMI Canada secretariat at krystal@ammi.ca. Receipt confirmation emails will be sent from the same address within 72 hours of AMMI Canada receiving each application.
